SIKH COALITION INC

Program Services

Achievement	Pgm. Svc. Exp.
Civil Rights, Social Action &amp; Advocacy Programs, G: The Sikh Coalition uses legal action as the last resort to resolve a dispute. Yet in many cases this is necessary, and a strong legal program makes potential violators more receptive to education and advocacy initiatives. The legal program seeks to help individual Sikhs in need and to take on cases that set long-term precedents that impact the entire country. In 2004, the Coalition won a major victory by getting the NYPD to settle a case involving a Sikh man who was fired for refusing to wear his turban. After several rounds of legal filing, the NYPD agreed to settle the case, and the man (Amric Singh) is now working as a traffic agent in Manhattan. The resources created to pursue this case will be useful if similar situations arise in the future. They have already arisen, as the Coalition continued to fight against an MTA ban against turbans. Kevin Harrington who had worked for over 18 years, with his turban, for the MTA, was asked to remove his turban or take a job that was not customer facing. The Coalition made substantive progress on this case in 2004 and is confident it will win the case if it should go to the courts. Finally, the Legal program took on over two dozen smaller cases involving people discriminated against because of their religious appearance. These men and women were not allowed entry to public places, discriminated again at their work, and harassed because of their articles of faith. At any given point, the Coalition normally has more than 20 such cases open. (25 Clients) Grants and Allocations: $0.00	$57,093.00
UnknownUnclassified: Education is the surest way of preventing future discrimination. With over 300 million people in the United States, providing education on diversity and different groups is a daunting task. The Sikh Coalition seeks to reach a large number of people, particularly those who influence the opinions of others, and educate them on diversity and Sikhs, through training programs and creative means. Schools, academic institutions, members of the media, law enforcement and government officials are prime examples of our education focus. In 2004, the Coalition performed over 40 in person training sessions to these groups (an even greater number were conducted using materials created by the Coalition). Also, over 10,000 brochures on Sikhs and over 30 copies of videos on diversity were distributed throughout the year. The Coalition also partnered with several other community organizations to deliver on Project Reflect, an educational curriculum for school districts to use to teach about diversity and better meet the needs of a broad base of students. The programs has begun in two districts in Washington State. The Coalition also inaugurated a Diversity Essay Competition open to high school age students from all backgrounds. Students learned about those different from themselves and explored how we, as a society, can better understand one another. The Coalition received essay entries from across the globe. Finally, in 2004 the Sikh Coalition worked closely with the Wing Luke Asian Museum in the International District of Seattle to create a traveling exhibition that encompasses the viewpoints and issues experienced by Sikh youth in America. The project, Sikh Virsa, is a reflection of a number of Sikh youth, ranging from age 12 to 22, attempting to tackle issues related to defining their identity despite the pressures of assimilation. The exhibit will be in display at various museums across the country in 2005 (50 Events Presentations) Grants and Allocations: $0.00	$22,684.00
Civil Rights, Social Action &amp; Advocacy Programs, G: Navigating various government agencies, law enforcement and the media is a complex endeavor. To do so requires an understanding of your rights, what facets of national, state or local government are relevant to an individual situation and how government or media attention can be used to resolve a situation. The Sikh Coalition guides people through this process in a way that helps the individual and sets an example for the society at large. In 2004, the Coalition had a number of key successes in this area. 1. The Coalition held a very success campaign, Every Voice Counts, that helped people register to vote and provided those not yet eligible to vote with information on their rights and how they could become involved in the process. Well over 2000 people were registered or educated by this program. 2. The Coalition partnered with many other community organizations to organize the APA (Asian Pacific American) Summit in Washington State in May of 2004. The event brought together different communities, created dialogue with government leaders and hosted educational workshops on how the APA communities could improve their ability to interact with state and local governments. One of the many highlights from the event was a gubernatorial candidates forum	$16,074.00

Achievement*Pgm. Svc. Exp.

featuring all the major candidates for Governor discussing issues related to Asian Pacific Americans. In addition, many political leaders ranging from state assemblyman to members from the U.S. House of Representatives participated in the event. 3. Two high profile cases in 2004 represented major successes for the advocacy program. In one case a high school student, just days before his graduation, was told he would not be allowed to participate if he wore his turban. With time very limited, a combination of local networking with community members and organizations, as well as some assistance from the Coalition legal team led to the student being allowed to participate without an legal intervention. 3b. In the other major victory, a Sikh man was beaten up in Queens NY. Initially, police were hesitant to investigate and charged only one of the five men involved in the assault. Through working with many community organizations, government certain police officials, and the press, the police reopened the investigation and caught all the men involved in the assault. SIKH COALITION INC*22-3834037*Additional Explanations

Additional Explanations

Identifier: Balancs at Beginning of YearReference: Form 990 - Part IV

Explanation: The beginning balances for this year are different than the end balances for last year in where they are placed. The total amount is the same, but the allocation between savings/checkings is different. This is a mistake on last year's form. The Sikh Coalition currently uses cash accounting for all transactions.
